The main purpose of my website is to create an online portfolio so that I can keep all of my work on one significant place. This would be a highly efficient way for employers and companies to go through my work and what I've done so far instead of continuously looking for my things. Also I want a platform where people can see more of my creative side instead of somewhat of a technical side. As most jobs related to the Digital Media Field want to get to a person's work quick and easy so they can have a decently easy time evaluating them, I want to make my site very easy to navigate through. All the social media links are going to be the bottom of the homepage. The Logo that will be on top of the page will also serve as a home button when highlighted, so dual functionality with that. I want to make a nav bar in the middle of the screen with three things , About Me , Portfolio, and Resume. 3 things that are essential to employers and a minimal number of things for people to go through easily. About me will have a simple picture of me and a description, the portfolio page will show boxes which show pictures of my projects and when further clicked they will show more of what it is. The resume will just be that one document containing the resume. This is my simple site proposal in my Green and Black color scheme. I want to make it pleasing to look at as well as simple.
